of any such conduct, or course but to show the principle, and if Bro. Johnson in his preaching is in opposition to this council and the epistle we have received from the Presidency I the Valley, I feel that we have a right to control the affair.. prest Young well know where he gave Bro. Johnson his instructions., that there was a regulator here to regulate if things took a wrong course or did not go right. Urged the necessity of precautionary measures, as regards the emigration to the Valley untill other instructions are received, with all due differences, not withstanding Bro. Johnson's instructions from prest Young Bro. Johnson said he would take upon him the responsibility of saying that every man would be sustained that had only a sufficient out-fit to reach the Valley if they had were without a rag to clothes or a mouthful of provisions when they arrive in the Valley. He said all hell might boil over, and he would do as he was told, and act upon the instructions he received from Prest Young,, said he wanted every individual, that could get to the Valley, should go, and he would be responsible when they got there, that should be provided for, said there was no danger of any ones starving there was a plenty of nutricious roots. The indians considered them better than sweet potatoes, said the Brethren on their return from the Valley fed upon them.mes

Expatiated upon the resourse and advantages

The Valley

would afford the brethren when they arrived there, and concluded by saying these things I have taught he Brehtren,, and will do it if it costs me my head..

Counsellor Benson followed with simalor remarks to those of Counsellor Snow..

Counsellor Benj. Clapp followed urging the emigration, and said he felt to sustain Bro. Johnson..

Counsellor Snow refered to his former remarks and said he feared such a course would land many in the Valley destitute Counsellor H. W. Miller said let the people go provided they can Prest Hyde said he did not feel like controlling Bro. Johnson or the counsel he had received, he should
